

Mike Boland has been a freelance software developer since 1986 and has been on contract with Lockheed Martin continuously since 1990. Being able to maintain such a long term relationship has no doubt been aided by Boland’s demonstrated ability to “think outside the box” and repeatedly provide simple solutions to complicated problems.

“Thinking outside the box” is what guided Boland in developing ClaimOnceID – a counterintuitive, yet remarkably simple, nation-by-nation solution to identity fraud that that may well represent the only viable answer to this insidious problem. Having recently filed a patent application, Boland is seeking to partner with any organization that can work with its nation’s government in getting this solution implemented. He is also available to work directly as a consultant for any government agency that has a vested interest in ridding their country of this devastating problem.
